

Musical Theatre Tour Contingency Claim

A paper by the DPCS

Background:

On 9 August 2009 the control centre “brain” of an electric drum kit was stored in temporary storage opposite the concert hall in a cardboard box. During the following months things were found to move around inside the storage room, presumably moved by the builders.

At the start of the academic year it was found that the brain was missing, the next few months were spent searching for it. Having moved the Society are now sure that DramSoc don't have it and not does the society. It is therefore presumed lost or discarded as a result of the building works. A replacement costs £1399.

A full statement given by the society is attached to this paper. To reimburse the society was verbally agreed upon by the former Executive Committee.

Decision required:

To reimburse the club from either Exec contingency pot or Building works budget to the amount £1399*
